

BEASLEY ALLEN FILES CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AGAINST AT&T OVER DATA BREACH

Beasley Allen has filed a class action lawsuit against AT&T for failing to secure customer data, leading to a significant breach.

Montgomery, AL (April 23, 2024)— Beasley Allen has filed a class action lawsuit on behalf of AT&T customers whose personal information was compromised during a cyberattack and data breach.

The lawsuit, filed on behalf of Scott Mathews and all others similarly situated, alleges that AT&T failed to properly secure its customers' personal information, including full name, email address, mailing address, phone number, social security number, date of birth, AT&T account number and passcode.

According to the lawsuit, around March 31st AT&T began informing customers of a "security incident." Despite the notice, AT&T failed to provide critical information about the breach, including the dates when it happened and when they investigated. They also should have explained why they waited over three years to inform their current and former customers about the breach after detecting the cyberattack.

The defendant's negligence has put plaintiffs' and class members' identities at risk because their private information is now in the hands of data thieves.

"AT&T failed to protect its customers' personal information and notify them of the data breach properly," said Beasley Allen attorney Larry Golston. "Our goal is to hold the company accountable and ensure that affected customers receive the compensation they deserve."

Customers whose personal information was compromised because of the AT&T security breach are potential class members.

Beasley Allen is seeking compensation for affected customers and calling for AT&T to take measures to prevent future data breaches.
